All around the world, children are living their lives, just like you.

All around the world, these children play.
Some like to play with a box or a ball.

Others like to play with a tablet or a toy.
But there are no children who play exactly like you.
How do you like to play?

All around the world, children dance. Some dance like this.

Others dance like that. But, there are no children who dance exactly like you. How do you dance?

All around the world, children learn.
Some want to learn about things that are right up close.

Others want to learn about things that are far, far, away.
But, there are no children who learn exactly like you.
What do you want to learn?

All around the world, children dream. Some dream of their future.

Others dream of magical things.
But, there are no children who dream exactly like you.
What do you dream?

All around the world, children love.
Some love by giving hugs and cuddles.

Others love by sitting quietly near you.
But, there are no children who love exactly like you.
How do you love?

All around the world, children are playing and dancing, just like you.
They are learning and dreaming, too.

But there are no children who are exactly like you.
Do you know why?

A young girl with dark, curly hair is captured mid-jump against a clear blue sky with scattered white clouds. She is wearing a bright pink long-sleeved shirt, light gray leggings, and dark sneakers with pink accents. Her arms are raised high in a 'V' shape, and her legs are bent at the knees. In the bottom right corner, the top of a palm tree is visible. The overall mood is joyful and uplifting.

Because there is only one, wonderful you.

About the Author

Maureen Donnelly

Maureen Donnelly grew up in New York. Today, she lives across the street from a lobster pier in the small town of Kittery, Maine. As a girl, Maureen loved to read. She fell in love with children's books then and she's still in love with them today. These days, Maureen works with a team of people who make reading programs for kids. Her office contains lots and lots of children's books as well as a snoring dog named Pippi.

Around the world, children are living their lives, just like you are.
But no child is exactly like you. Do you know why? Read this book to find out!
